Program
Title	The Social Functions of Museums and the Construction of Europe
Short description by the host university	A museum, according to the official ICOM definition, is an institution at the service of society, so any analysis or reflection on museums must take into account this social dimension, consubstantial to their very nature. The course The Social functions of Museums and the Construction of Europe aims to directly address this field of study by analyzing the historical evolution of the social role of museums and the challenges that these institutions face today. All this without forgetting the unquestionable contributions that, throughout their historical development, they have made to the construction of the European project.
The host university will provide rooms in university residences at reduced prices. More information will be provided later.
