COURSE TITLE

Revolutions between history and historiography

TEACHING PERIOD

2nd term

SCIENTIFIC AREA

early modern history

LANGUAGE USED TO TEACH

English

COURSE SUMMARY

The course is dedicated to the analysis of revolutionary processes in the early modern and modern world (18th-19th centuries) and to the discussion of the different cases occurring in the Atlantic and in the Mediterranean areas. It will pay particular attention to the historiographical debate on the relationship between revolutions and the birth of political modernity in the West.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

The students (1) will identify the main issues raised in the contemporary historiographical debate on revolutionary processes in the early modern and modern world (18th-19th centuries); (2) will master the analytical tools to assess such issues with competence, analyzing in particular historical processes over a long period; (3) will discuss the principal historiographical interpretations.
