LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Law shapes and is shaped by social, political and cultural institutions and practices. In this course students will be introduced to key concepts in socio-legal studies and to scholarship in, on and, particularly, from Africa, that provide insights into the relationship between law and other social institutions on the continent. Africa is a large and diverse continent. The course explores shared themes of concern to African intellectuals, including aspects of law and colonialism, as well as country-specific engagements with law, particularly in post-colonial Africa. It moves from broad conceptual questions about the nature of African law to considering the ways in which laws are mobilized and contested by African legal actors and by ordinary citizens to address contemporary social concerns relating to, amongst others, land, sexuality, women's rights, and access to justice.
